

Participant Support

We anticipate there will be 12-15 grants $400 for participants, who are advanced graduate students, postdocs, or researchers at institutions without a probability group who have no access to funding. We will give preference to participants who live in the southeast, i.e. the states from Maryland to Texas. The application procedure is the same as for the other regional conferences. Applicants will send

- A one page letter describing their research interests and indicating whether they have access to funds to provide partial support
- A current CV
- Graduate students and postdocs should arrange for a letter to be sent from their adviser or someone familiar with their work

For graduate students and postdocs who have access to funds at their home institution our funds will be used to match other funding, e.g., the home institution pays airfare and we cover lodging and local expenses. To the extent that the overall budget allows, we will be more generous to participants with no access to funding.

We will start reviewing applications on April 4, but we will accept applications after that date. Email your materials to Rick Durrett (rtd) at the Math department at Duke.edu with the subject line “application for support”.
